A Get to know your colleagues.

Building authentic relationships at work is crucial to being a great leader. Fakeness smells. Be honest. Sincerely show interest in people. When you go for coffee or lunch, share a personal anecdote or story that will most likely evoke trust. Ask your colleague or team member:

How could I be of service to you?

How can I help you with (the challenge they share with you)?

B Celebrate failures!

Some companies have a big bell to celebrate successes (like RyanAir when they land before schedule). Why not find a way to celebrate your team's failures? You can make it an acknowledging group effort to practice Feedforward and work on improving in the future. Startups prove this works.

I highly recommend reading one of the books from the Arbinger Institute, Leadership and Self Deception: Getting Out of the Box. Admittedly this may take you more than 10mins, but I think the way it's written will really help you understand and foster the change from "me" to "we." I like this book so much that I also talk about it in my blog post about responsibility and proactivity.
